The Testimony of a Gentile

By Jonathan Olvera

In our time, creation has changed many times. God is all-powerful, and the laws of creation are His making. Violence and suffering are real—and unavoidable. It is selfish to read the Scriptures only for personal gain, without seeking their full depth.

The Bible details blood sacrifice and the inheritance of God's chosen people. Yet God has made new sacrifices upon the earth. Some claim that humans have been altered in laboratories—but they are not the same as you and me. They live in fear of their own fate.

Many believe strong propaganda, but the truth remains: false idols are still worshipped, and those who do so will perish in their sin.

The heavens echo the greatness of creation. Life, technology, and the laws of nature continue. Gravity governs all—from the smallest microbe to the vastness of the cosmos. Science searches for answers, but some use it to reject the truth of God.

Fornication is everywhere. It astonishes me that a vast population can entertain itself with impurity—year after year—without reflection, prayer, or understanding the consequences. There is an obsession with sin, yet no manuscript, no study, and no foundation in the science of morality. Lust is rampant.

But I am not troubled by these distractions. My purpose is greater. I have work to complete—work that glorifies the Lord.

Behold, the King!

I am real. I praise creation and God. I fear destruction. The world drowns in meaningless distractions, but I will not be deceived. What value does a thief or a fornicator place on wisdom? Would they listen to instruction?

They mock righteousness. But I remain steadfast.

The lake of fire consumes all who turn from God. The laws of physics, the weight of grief, the corruption of currency—these define more of our existence than fleeting pleasure. And yet, a single moment in time can echo in creation for a thousand years.

God has called His servant to understand sacrifice, judgment, and truth.

Do you accept God?
Do you honor His Ten Commandments?

Why do people cry out to Him while remaining in sin—while they covet, fornicate, and commit adultery? It is vile. It is shameful.

How can men twist the Word of God for their own convenience? To claim ignorance is to confess sin.

God is mighty. God is just.
He has spoken.

To die in blind innocence is tragic. But to live in sin—lying, stealing, fornicating, and avoiding God's presence—is to live in emptiness. Without Him, life is void.

Sometimes, I pray for my Lord to take me from this world of corruption. I feel disconnected from this community, from this country. I no longer belong here.

Political struggles rage on. Rituals of sacrifice continue. Society busies itself with healthcare, ownership, and arguments that lead nowhere. Offense has become an art, but its purpose is lost. People question what’s artificial. But we should work. We should continue in our God-given purpose.

The battle is ongoing. It is terrible. But in the struggle, we bless the work of productivity. Through prayer, through exorcism, through the praise of God’s house —we find meaning.

Is this why some of us remain faithful?

Never dig too deep for a simple truth: we are here.

Hear me in my prayer, O Lord, in this battle.
Hear me in this heat.
Bless me, God, with Christ, my salvation.
Hear my cries and bless Your temple.
Drive away all evil.
